Brooklyn helped hand Barack Obama a historic win on Tuesday night — and then revelers spilled out into the streets in a cathartic victory party in several neighborhoods.

The Illinois senator, who did not enjoy the support of the borough's political establishment during the Democratic primary season, was backed by 79 percent of Brooklyn's voters and rang up more votes — 545,785 — than in any other county in New York State.

Perhaps no Brooklynites cheered more than blacks, who celebrated the momentous occasion just two generations removed from the days when, in some states, many were effectively barred from the polls.

"Most people are saying that they never imagined they would see this in their lifetime," said Rev. Clinton Miller of Brown Memorial Baptist Church in Clinton Hill. "They thought that maybe their grandchildren might live to see this."

He smiled as he remembered one congregant telling a story of how she teared up when she spoke of her grandfather, who had walked to the polls and signed his name with an "X" in the 1960s.

Obama's victory, called by the networks at just after 11 p.m., sent supporters rushing spontaneously into the streets.

From Kensington to Fort Greene, and throughout Park Slope, Prospect Heights, and down to Carroll Gardens and Brooklyn Heights, people carried signs and chanted "Yes we did!"

But in Williamsburg, three celebrants were arrested for blocking streets and five others received summons for public drinking at Bedford Avenue and North Seventh Street, police said.

The celebrations capped a historic day that began with long lines before polls even opened in complete darkness at 6 a.m. At some points, voters had to wait for up to three hours.

"I'm going to stay [in line] because you do what you have to do," said John Gillick, who waited outside the state Supreme Court building near Borough Hall. "But it makes me angry to see [that] the wait is so long. These people probably won't come back."

But many more stayed so they could vote for Obama, who actually lived in Brooklyn Heights in 1983 after graduating from Columbia University.

During the campaign, Brooklyn came alive for Obama kids held bake sales, women paraded GOP vice presidential nominee Sarah Palin for Halloween and posters of the future president filled brownstone windows.

—Evan Gardner

In Brooklyn, 545,785 voters backed Barack Obama, more than any other county in the state, and the fifth highest total in the nation.

Homes in Heights still hot

By Ben Muessig and Zeke Faux
The Brooklyn Paper

Wall Street blues be damned!

A Brooklyn Heights home that sold for $10.8 million last month — the most expensive residential real-estate deal in Brooklyn Heights history — shows that there will always be a buyer for the best buildings on the priciest blocks, no matter what's happening on The Street, according to real-estate experts.

"Certain properties and certain neighborhoods are less susceptible to economic downturns than others," said James Cornell, a vice president at the mammoth Corcoran Group. "There are always properties in certain locations that retain their value, regardless of what the buyer reads in the paper that morning."

Cornell said the blockbuster sale of a townhouse at 88 Remsen St. (pictured), a five-story mansion and its adjacent Grace Court Alley carriage house was "very much in line" with the equally jaw-dropping $10.75-million sale of a townhouse at 140 Columbia Heights at the peak of the market in 2006.

Sandra Dowling, principal broker and owner of Brooklyn Heights Real Estate on Montague Street, agreed.

"The higher end — million-dollar-plus — is still very strong," she said.

It remains unclear who shelled out the big bucks to buy See $10 M on page 9

Season of change

A lone walker was framed by the glorious colors of Prospect Park on Monday, as fall reached its peak. Now, if our reading of the calendar is correct, autumn will soon give way to less balmy weather. But look on the bright side: our winter pictures will be even better.

Marty is 'Jonesing' for shows

By Mike McLaughlin
The Brooklyn Paper

It's the ultimate battle of the band-shells: Coney Island may someday have an outdoor summer concert venue to rival the seaside theaters at Jones Beach and the PNC Bank Arts Center in New Jersey.

Borough President Markowitz's dream of building a modern amphitheater in Aser Levy Park is finally becoming a reality as the city gears up to begin construction next year on the $64-million stage set to open in 2012.

"It will make our borough a natural stop on the summer concert circuit for entertainers," Markowitz said.

The taxpayer-financed coliseum, on Surf Avenue near West Fifth Street, is just blocks away from KeySpan Park, the publicly funded Brooklyn Cyclones baseball stadium that also hosts concerts.

Stadium officials told The Brooklyn Paper they were not concerned about competing to schedule hot acts. They added that the presence of another attraction in Coney Island would have an overall positive impact by bringing more people to the amusement cradle of America.

The planned Coney Island Center, which has acquired the nickname "The Saddle" due to the shape of its roof, would have 5,000 covered seats, plus lawn space for 3,000 people.

Buying candy from a baby

Prospect Heights dentist tries to find the 'sweet' spot

In afternoon trading, the price of Halloween candy held steady at $1 per pound in a Prospect Heights orthodontist's office, where Juliana Gmelch, 12, measured out four pounds.

By Mike McLaughlin
The Brooklyn Paper

Like another famous Grinch's attempt to steal Christmas, a Prospect Heights orthodontist's play to buy back kids' Halloween candy fell short on Monday.

Modeled on the city's gun buyback program, where weapons owners are allowed to exchange their firearms for cash with no questions asked, Dr. Sophia Scantlebury offered $1 for each pound of costume-begotten booty brought to her Plaza Street East office.

"It's not about the money," Scantlebury said. "When it's October, [kids] start thinking about candy."

And candy, we have long been told, is bad for teeth.

Nonetheless, Scantlebury found few youngsters willing to part with the satchels of free sugary treats that come only once a year as a rite of passage.

In fact, the first participant to redeem confections for cash was the mother of a boy who was conspicuously absent from the handover.

"He doesn't like candy," said Andrea Abrahams as she weighed her son's Halloween bounty on a scale like it had been seized in a drug raid by the DEA. "He just likes to go trick-or-treating." (In her son's absence, this claim could not be immediately verified.)

An hour later, an actual adolescent ventured in with a plastic jack-o'-lantern teeming with Hershey bars, Kit Kats and other giveaway goodies — and the kid was willing to part with the oral contraband.

"I don't usually eat candy unless they're Jelly Ranchers," said 12-year-old Juliana Gmelch. Her haul totaled four pounds — twice the maximum amount that Scantlebury had originally allowed.

"We cut her some slack because she's a good girl," said Tammie Mackey, the office's receptionist, hinting that the earlier two-pound maximum was actually waived because the boy back program was going so slowly.

By the end of the day, only 15 people had participated and only 20 pounds of candy were bought by the tooth doc. There were no reported tantrums or tears from children being separated from their sweets.

"It was a complete success," said the dentist who, despite her efforts on Monday, does not have a zero-tolerance approach to candy.

"If kids are going to have candy, they should eat a little right after their meal in order to avoid plaque attack" that can come from snacking throughout the day," she said.

That plaque attack will now be waged in Iraq, Scantlebury said she would ship the purchased candy to our heroic (and, apparently, candy-deprived) troops in the Middle East.

Don't worry about them; they have an excellent dental plan.

Good and evil!

We mean that in the Halloween sense, of course! Above, goody-two-shoes Elmo made an appearance at a Carroll Gardens event, while below, a gangster (with a headwound) and Dracula dropped by Park Slope's famed kids parade.

Sloan-Kettering is coming to Brooklyn

By Sarah Portlock
The Brooklyn Paper

Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center wants to bring its world-renowned cancer doctors to Downtown Brooklyn.

Last week, the legendary medical center signaled its desire to open a $5.1-million outpatient chemotherapy center when it applied to the state Health Department to open the clinic, a move necessary before any hospital builds a new facility or acquires expensive equipment, explained Sloan-Kettering spokeswoman Christine Hickey.

The project would be the hospital's first expansion within the five boroughs. It currently has facilities in Westchester, New Jersey and on Long Island.

"Many of our patients come from Brooklyn, and we know that it can be very difficult to travel into Manhattan for cancer treatment," Hickey said. "We wanted to respond to the needs of our patients by bringing some of our services closer to where they live."

State officials preliminarily approved the application on Oct. 24, but will now conduct further review to determine the hospital's need, financial analysis, costs and architecture, said agency spokeswoman Beth Goldberg.

"At this point, it's really early [in the process] so we can't give a timeline," Goldberg said.

"It differs with every ap-

The Sloan-Kettering would provide only chemotherapy for its patients in a space at 557 Atlantic Ave., near Fourth Avenue. For other cancer treatments, like radiation, patients will still have to go to Manhattan, Hickey said.

Teen valet killed in parking accident

The Brooklyn Paper

A 17-year-old restaurant valet parker was killed on Nov. 1 when he tried to stop a rolling minivan from hitting another parked car on 83rd Street in Bay Ridge.

Mousa Alijahi was working at his part-time job parking cars at the Pearl Room, a popular Third Avenue eatery, at just after 10 pm when the green 2007 Dodge minivan started rolling.

The first-year student at the College of Staten Island had hopped out of the vehicle without shifting gears into park, police said.

When the car began rolling backwards, Alijahi, whose hobbies included weightlifting and body-building, ran behind the car and tried to stop it from moving.

But the force of the vehicle threw him backward, pinning him in between the minivan and a parked gray sport utility vehicle, police said.

The teenager was taken to nearby Lutheran Medical Center, where he was pronounced dead later that night.

NEIGHBORHOOD REPORT

GOWANUS

It's DeBlasio vs. city on the canal

By Mike McLaughlin
The Brooklyn Paper

The Bloomberg Administration's plan to turn the land around the Gowanus Canal into the next residential frontier could be derailed by the local councilman who wants to link the future of that neighborhood with nearby Carroll Gardens, where residents want limits on new development.

Councilman Bill DeBlasio (D-Park Slope) supports the general principles of the city's plan of dividing the so-called "Gowanus Corridor" into separate sections for housing and light industry, but says he won't vote for it unless the Department of City Planning also caps building heights in Carroll Gardens.

"They are closely related," said DeBlasio, adding that the city cannot — and should not — do one without the other. "The community needs a guarantee that Carroll Gardens will be downzoned."

As the neighborhood's representative in City Hall, his vote is crucial because councilmembers typically vote with colleagues whose districts are affected by a rezoning.

The Gowanus plan, which will go through a public review next year, calls for tall residential buildings with some below-market rate units near the canal, a public esplanade on the polluted waterway and some manufacturing areas. It includes no provisions for curbing hotel construction. The plan's overall vision is similar to what Toll Brothers has proposed for a 447-unit mixed-use complex on a two-block lot along the canal (pictured), which is currently undergoing a separate public review.

Residents are worried that DeBlasio and Bloomberg, who locked horns over the recent term limit war, will continue to joust and stall both the Gowanus Corridor plan, which includes affordable housing mandates, and the Carroll Gardens downzoning plan.

Longtime Carroll Gardens activist Buddy Scotto worried that the Gowanus Plan would be "held hostage" if it is linked to a downzoning of his neighborhood. "We desperately need senior housing and affordable housing and the only way to get that is to encourage developers to come in [to the Gowanus]."

But an open-door policy to development in Carroll Gardens sparked an uproar when seven-story condos were proposed for the old Longshoreman's medical building at the corner of Court and Union streets, and another similarly sized building on Smith Street and Second Place.

The Department of City Planning says it will study Carroll Gardens to consider limiting building heights and densities, but the agency said it would not halt its pursuit of transforming the Gowanus Corridor.

BROOKLYN HEIGHTS

Yassky fallout! Ken is loaded for 'Baer'

The Brooklyn Paper

Add Ken Baer to the list of people angry about Councilman David Yassky's vote to let elected officials run for a third term — but unlike everyone else, Baer is actually doing something about it.

The former head of the New York State chapter of the Sierra Club said he will continue his quest for the 3rd District seat, even if the formidable Yassky runs for re-election. "I am definitely running for the seat — whether Yassky is running or not!" Baer told The Brooklyn Paper. "That's how outraged I am about his vote to gut term limits!"

On Oct. 23, Yassky joined 28 other members of the Council to overturn the results of two prior public referenda that created the former two-term limit. In the wake of that vote, several candidates for Yassky's seat — notably District Leader Jo Anne Simon, Hasidic activist Isaac Abraham and former Yassky staffer Evan Thies — have indicated that they won't run if Yassky abandons his campaign for City Comptroller and runs for a third term in the Council, as many expect him to do.

Baer said he would run on a platform of "sustainable development" and "community-derived" development plans and more support for mass transit. — Gersh Kuntzman

WILLIAMSBURG

No parking holyday on Kent

By Ben Muessig
The Brooklyn Paper

The city turned a six-block stretch of Kent Avenue in South Williamsburg into a no parking zone last Saturday morning — then immediately ticketed drivers in the heavily Hasidic neighborhood who couldn't move their cars on the Jewish holy day.

Workers started replacing the alternate-side parking signs with "No parking" and "No standing" signs between Broadway and Cuyler Street at around 6:30 am on the Jewish sabbath on Oct. 25 — when observant Jews are not allowed to drive.

We can't move our cars on Shabbos, so I asked the traffic cop, 'What's the deal?' There was nothing we could do," said Moti Spitzer, who was hit with a $115 fine at 9:18 am for leaving his car parked on Friday — at the time legally — near the corner of Kent Avenue and South 11th Street.

By the end of the weekend, 91 cars were hit with the fines.

Motli Spitzer shows off the ticket he and many others received after the city changed the signs — on a Saturday! — along mostly Jewish Kent Avenue.

The city ended up throwing out all of the summonses, Department of Transportation spokesman Scott Gastel said.

New parking regulations are a first step towards Kent Avenue's long-planned — and much-contested — bike lane.

"Getting the ticket is bad, but that's not even the main issue here," Spitzer said. "The issue is that they are taking away parking to put in another bike lane, which we don't need."

The no-parking zone will give way to a temporary painted bike lane, which will eventually be replaced by the Brooklyn Waterfront Greenway — a divided bike lane and walking path that will run from Greenpoint to Sunset Park.

Cycling advocates and local politicians have touted the Greenway as an essential part of the city's biking backbone, but members of South Williamsburg's Hasidic community have railed against the cycling corridor, arguing that there are already too many bike lanes in the neighborhood — and that loss of parking spaces on Kent Avenue could not be offset by changing parking regulations on adjacent residential streets.

DOWNTOWN

The breakfast of champions

Gadflies at a breakfast event.

Gadflies got whiplash at a Democratic power broker's annual pre-Election Day breakfast at Junior's last Friday as virtually the entire political class traded City Hall gossip, election strategy and, of course, cheesecake-filled goodie bags.

Democratic state committeeman Steve Cohn, a once (and future?) City Council candidate, hosted the breakfast every year with bar mitzvah-like good cheer.

On hand were City Comptroller (and future mayor?) Bill Thompson, Rep. (and future mayor?) Anthony Weiner (right, in photo with Cohn and Rep. Jerry Nadler), Councilman (and future public advocate?) Bill DeBlasio, Councilman (and future councilman?) David Yassky, plus all the aides and hangers-on who make the business of politics so much fun.

Former Borough President Howard Golden (above) was also on hand. — Gersh Kuntzman

GREENPOINT

City seeks residential downzone

By Ben Muessig
The Brooklyn Paper

In hopes of curbing skyscraper development in Greenpoint and Williamsburg, the city has proposed capping the height of buildings in a 175-block downzoning that residents said should have happened years ago.

Last week, the Department of City Planning unveiled plans to initiate height limits in much of the quick-changing communities, barring new buildings from being taller than 50 feet on the narrow residential streets that make up 80 percent of the area, and 70 feet on many wider residential streets.

"The new zoning will direct new buildings to follow the context of what exists here already," said Brooklyn City Planning Director Punima Kapur of the district, whose north and western border is the waterfront area that the city controversially upzoned in 2005.

The proposed rezoning would also nix the so-called "height factor" loophole that allows developers to build as tall as they like as long as they obtain large lots — giving way to buildings like the 106-foot high-rise that towers over Eckford Street and the 125-foot edifice that looms over Richardson Street.

Builders that develop residences on bustling blocks including McGuinness Boulevard and Manhattan, Metropolitan and Union avenues, among others, would be allowed to build to 80 feet if they include affordable housing in their buildings or in units nearby.

A stretch of irregularly shaped lots along the Brooklyn-Queens Expressway would maintain its current zoning, which planners said would encourage development on land that would otherwise be difficult to use.

The city also intends to tweak shopping areas to encourage businesses to open on busy commercial streets, while keeping them away from adjacent residential blocks.

Greenpoint and Williamsburg residents are happy that the proposal would curb much of the high-rise development — but they wish the city had put the limits in place shortly after the 2005 rezoning.

"The most important thing is that we get some version of this done very, very quickly," said community activist Evan Thies. "I'm disappointed at how slowly the Department of City Planning has come up with this. A lot of damage has already been done."

More development is likely in the months before the downzoning takes effect.

After the Department of City Planning finalizes the plan, it will need to go through a lengthy land-use review, which includes public hearings, community board meetings, approval from the borough president, and a vote by the City Council.

On the front
Intruders burglarized a Smith Street apartment on Oct. 30. The 32-year-old resident told police she was not in her home, which she tried to contact from 11 a.m. to 4:45 p.m. when a thief grabbed a laptop, two iPods, $60 and a jewelry box. — Mike McLaughlin

Drunkin' money
A video camera caught a bachelorette party stealing cash from a Ninth Street bar on Nov. 1. The camera showed the perp pass through an employee-only area of the establishment, which is located between Sixth and Seventh avenues, at around 1:10 a.m. With four beers in his hands, he proceeded upstairs to mingle with patrons, but some 20 minutes later, the perp reappeared in the restricted area, stole some cash, and left the building. Cops caught a suspect two hours later, and all of the stolen money was recovered, police said.

Toy boys
Three thugs walked into a jewelry store on the corner of Fifth Avenue and 12th Street on Nov. 1 and stole $19,375 worth of jewelry — all with a toy gun — but the best ended in their arrest. Gunpoint mug
Two mugshots taken at a man in the lobby of his St. Johns Place building on Oct. 30. The two crooks followed the victim into the building, which is between Seventh and Eighth avenues, at around 8:25 p.m. and pulled a gun with a red-painted muzzle, punched the man in the face, and took his phone and $100 from his wallet.

Fire escaped
Someone broke into an apartment on Seventh Avenue between noon and 1:15 p.m. on Oct. 29 and stole a laptop and cash. The burglar used the fire escape to enter the residence, between Carroll Street and Garfield Place. Once inside, he grabbed the laptop and escaped through the front door.

Phone heist
Three men stole at least half a dozen cellphones, including four of the $1,000 iPhones from a store on the corner of Flatbush Avenue and Park St. on Oct. 29. The thieves walked into the store at 12:40 p.m. and furiously lifted $1,695 worth of merchandise before getting into a car and driving away. Hours later, cops caught three suspects, including one 14-year-old boy, police said. — Evan Gardner

Deep cuts
Cops are searching for a perp who slashed a woman's tires on Oct. 24, causing $400 in damage. The owner parked her car on McDonald Avenue between 10th Avenue and Tenth Streets at 2 p.m. but came back several hours later to find the tires flat and knife marks through the rubber.

UPDATE! Cops arrest one in Fort Greene salon 'hit'

By Mike McLaughlin and Evan Gardner
The Brooklyn Paper

Police say they have arrested one of the two gunmen who killed a man and wounded four bystanders — including an off-duty cop — in a Fulton Street beauty parlor in a classic robbery on Oct. 27. Cops said they collared an East New York resident in his home last Tuesday, but did not announce the arrest until the 22-year-old was arraigned last Thursday. He was charged with murder and weapons possession, though his accomplice is still at large. The Monday afternoon hit brought to mind the neighborhood's all-too-recent dark days, when crime and killings were common. "It was like the Wild West," said Sivena Smith, a cashier in the Cake Man Raven bakery on Fulton Street, where the murdered man had just bought a piece of cake. "I'm just glad my appointment [in the beauty parlor] was not until Thursday."

Witnesses and police sources said that two men jumped from a dark SUV, possibly a Chevy Tahoe, and began shooting at a 19-year-old pedestrian who had just stepped out of the renowned bakery at around 1:30 p.m. The victim fled down the street and sought cover in the De Lux Gallery, a salon, but the shooters chased him inside and killed him with a single bullet to the head. Police said he was dead on arrival at the hospital. Four other people were hurt in the afternoon attack — two women and two men. Three were inside the beauty parlor, but according to an 88th Precinct source, one man was struck by an errant bullet while waiting for a bus on Fulton Street. They were taken to Bellevue and Kings County hospitals. The store's owner was one of the victims. She was shot in the leg. Another victim was a 41-year-old off-duty police officer getting her hair cut in the salon, which is between South Portland Avenue and South Oxford Street at 1:50 p.m. The officer, who works out of the 76th Precinct stationhouse on Union Street in Carroll Gardens, was shot in the foot. The broad daylight murder turned the heart of Fort Greene into a media circus, but 15 years ago, when crimes rates were much higher in this precinct, such an event would barely have registered as a blip on the city's radar. Compared to 1993, for example, there has been 72 percent less crime this year. And, overall, murder is down more than 85 percent since that year. But employees of Greene Community Pharmacy next door to the barbershop were talking about the violence. "The victim didn't know that something was happening here," said a clerk from Bedford-Stuyvesant. "But it proves you're never totally safe."

Concert
An axman forged interest in a pair of fancy spears in order to cash a Craigslist seller on Oct. 22. The crook mailed the victim a phony money order for $2,380 in order to purchase the $470 spears, then asked the seller — a Lenox and Street man — to refund him. The victim wired the crook the money before discovering that the conman's check was fake. SCREAM!
A gun-toting goth masked like the villain in the horror film "Scream" chased a 25-year-old woman on Halloween. The haunting hoodlum confronted the victim at the corner of Lorimer Street and Driggs Avenue at 2 a.m. "Give me your stuff," he said, before revealing a small silver handgun. The victim forked over her purse, which contained a wallet, $80, credit cards, IDs, and a checkbook. The mugger jumped into a car, which drove off westbound on Driggs. Just 25 minutes earlier, cops spotted a man carrying a "Scream" mask when they pulled over a car with tinted glass, police said.

Halloween Horror
A Debevoise Avenue Halloween party turned scary when a reveler shot a 26-year-old partner twice in the face. The gunman and the victim got into an argument the nearly fatal argument at around 1:45 a.m. when the victim guest pulled the trigger — hitting the victim with two .380 caliber rounds, cops said. — Ben Muegg

Operatic new venue for Billyburg

Williamsburgers, launder your tunes and grab your monies.

A long-forgotten 600-seat theater, complete with a proscenium and a raked Shakespearean stage, opened to the public for the first time in decades this week — for three nights of opera!

Built as a community center, library, and performance space in 1897, the McCadden Memorial Theater on Berry Street faded into obscurity, functioning primarily as the site of the St. Peter and Paul Roman after-school program since 2000.

But on Nov. 6, Thomas Lawrence Toscano, artistic director of OperaGNY, reopened the venue with a minimalist rendition of Franco Leon's gripping opera "L'Oracolo."

And as excited as Toscano was about the production, which features a small cast of local actors crooning about San Francisco's Chinatown at the turn of the 20th century, he was just as eager to bring new life to the long-forgotten — but surprisingly intact — venue.

"It's a phenomenal theater," he said. "There just aren't spaces that are built like this anymore. It could bring so much to the neighborhood: modern theater, traditional theater, modern music, traditional music — you could do anything here."

After the three-night opera stand, the next public event at the McCadden Memorial Theater will be a sing-along of Handel's "Messiah" on Dec. 14 at 4 p.m.

"L'Oracolo," Nov. 6–8 at McCadden Memorial Theater (288 Berry St. between South Second and Third Streets), 8 p.m. Tickets, $20. For information, call (718) 312-8564.

Flea circus!

An indie artistic movement is burgeoning in Brooklyn, and two entrepreneurs are doing their part with new ways to champion hand-crafted stuff.

This weekend, the Fact and Fancy Gallery will open in Boerum Hill, and on Nov. 22, the Bedford Avenue Flea Market will open along the border of Bedford-Stuyvesant and Clinton Hill.

"I opened this gallery to support my friends and colleagues in the indie handmade movement, which is really blowing up right now," said Fact and Fancy owner Danielle Marcel (pictured).

Everything in the store is handmade, from the earrings and clothes to the trompe l'oeil floor. Marcel had painted trompe l'oeil wooden beams, complete with knots and detailing.

"I really want to encourage people to buy handmade and support local, independent businesses," she said of the venue, which is at 750 Hoyt Street near Atlantic Avenue.

Similarly, Bedford Avenue Flea organizer Christine Petway said she wanted to showcase local artists and designers. She found a perfect space in the old collision shop at the corner of Bedford and Lafayette avenue, and Burnett Street in Marine Park. Call (914) 835-2153 for info.
